

Is Your Company in Good Standing?

Have you filed your Annual Report

If your company is not properly maintained according to your state's laws, your company may fall out of "Good Standing."

Being out of Good Standing may result in fines and/or tax penalties.

What if your company is not in good standing?

Most likely, some sort of Reinstatement filing(s) or past due Annual Reports will need to be submitted. In addition, payments for any missed fees and/or penalties will need to be made.

Annual Reports are NOT an option

A majority of states require that corporations file an Annual Report in the states they are transacting business. In some states, a Franchise Tax is related to the annual report. Preparing the forms and understanding the requirements to file an annual report can be time consuming and complex. If you operate in more than one state, this task can become overwhelming. Each state has different requirements and due dates. Notification and reminders may not always be sent. Ensuring you remain current with your annual report compliance will help alleviate future status issues that could include being detrimentally "administratively dissolved."
